WELCOME

How to use this journal

Over the next 90 days, this journal is a gentle companion — a quiet, judgment-free space to notice how you're doing, and to take small steps forward. There is no wrong way to use it. Some days you'll write pages; other days a single line is more than enough.

Each day

Fill in a Daily Page — a quick mood check, a short prompt, and space for notes.

Each week

Pause at the Weekly Reflection to notice patterns and choose one simple next step.

When it's heavy

Turn to "Finding Your Way Forward" to untangle a worry into a small action.

Whenever you like

Color a page, write an affirmation, or revisit a memory. This is your space.

One small step at a time. You are not alone in this.

A GENTLE TOOL

Finding Your Way Forward

When everything feels heavy, a small, clear next step can bring relief. Use this whenever your mind feels tangled.

1. What feels heavy right now? (Name it plainly.)

2. What part of this is outside my control? (I can set it down.)

3. What is one small thing that IS within my control?

4. The single next step I can take today is...

5. Someone I could reach out to for help is...

6. A truth or hope I want to hold onto is...

BEFORE WE BEGIN

Where I am right now

When I first heard my diagnosis, I felt...

The people I want beside me in this season are...

The things that comfort me most are...

What I hope for, even on the hard days, is...

HOLD ONTO THESE

Words for the hard days

You are braver than you know.

One breath, one hour, one day at a time.

Rest is part of the fight.

Your body is working hard for you – thank it.

You are more than this diagnosis.

It's okay to have hard days.

You are surrounded by love, even now.

Small victories still count.

How I feel today

Okay

Good

Today's reflection

What is one thing my body did well today?

One small win today

I'm grateful for

Notes & thoughts

"You are braver than you know."

WEEK 1

Weekly reflection & a simple next step

What helped me this week?

What was hard — and what did I learn from it?

My one simple resolution for next week:

This week I made time to...

☐

Rest

☐

Move gently

☐

Connect with someone

☐

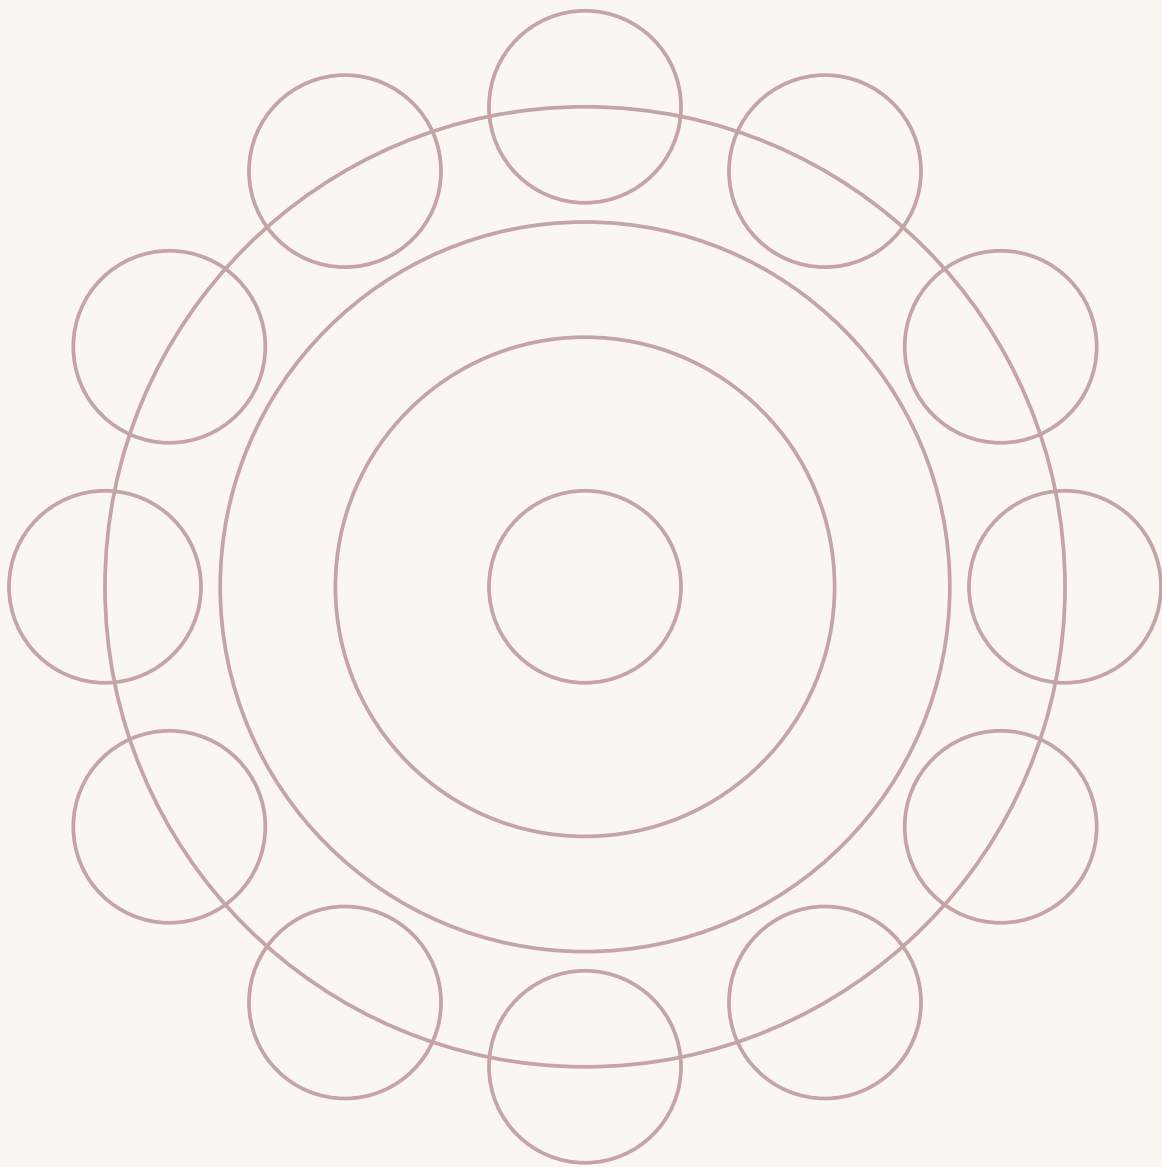

Ask for help

☐

Do one thing for me

TAKE A BREATH

A quiet space to color

Let your mind rest while your hands create.

This is just a taste.

The full journal includes everything you've seen here, plus:
